

MARGARET ROSENTHAL

Margaret Rosenthal trained as a nurse at the Alfred Hospital Melbourne before entering university and completing a degree in agricultural science. Subsequently she undertook research work in the field of soil-physics and gained a doctor of philosophy degree from Sydney University. She then entered the teaching profession, firstly teaching science at MLC Burwood, and then science and health education at Sydney Teacher's College. Currently Margaret Rosenthal is head of the newly formed Department of Nursing Studies at Sydney Teacher's College. In addition, she is very involved in the work of the Girl Guides Association, having been an adult leader for 14 years and in September will take over the position of State Commissioner for N.S.W.
